Protect your business from fraud

Don't be a victim. While any of the following can occur during a perfectly legitimate transaction, these characteristics are frequently present during fraudulent transactions.

Watch out for suspicious behaviour from customers

- Make random purchases by picking up items with no regard to quantity.
- Provide you with an authorisation number which is allegedly obtained from the bank.
- Show up when the shop is about to close, pick up unusual amounts of expensive items, and place pressure on you/your staff to process the transaction quickly.
- Demand and dictate how the transaction should be processed.

Also observe their body language: if they look nervous, that may be a signal that something is wrong with the transaction.

Important card features to know when processing a transaction

Rule #1

If possible, do not handle the customer's cards

When the card is dipped into the card machine but is not registering as a chip card, it may be fake

When the card has no chip but the card machine shows it as a chip card, the card may be cloned.

Rule #2

A transaction authorised by the cardholder using a pin, is the most secure

When the card machine does not process the transaction when the card is dipped: Do not proceed with a forced magnetic-strip transaction.Never use your override to force the magnetic-strip transaction.

If the card network logo does not match the first digit 3-AMEX, 4-VISA, 5-MASTERCARD, the card is a fake.

Ensure that the card is signed at the back and that the signature matches with the customer's signature on the payment receipt, especially for non-emuchip cards.

The card number on the card must match the card number printed on the payment receipt. If the numbers do not match, the card may be fake.

The card network logo will always be on the bottom right of the card. If it is not there, the card may be fake.
